

Python Identifiers

- * Identifier is user defined name given to a variable, function, class, object, module, package
- * The identifier is a combination of characters, digits and underscore symbol only
- * Identifiers are case-sensitive. num and Num are three different identifiers in python

Rules For Naming Python Identifiers

- * It can be combination of A-Z, a-z, 0-9 or underscore
- * It should start with an alphabet character or an underscore (-) symbol
- * It should not start with a digit but contains digits from second position onwards
- * It cannot contain identifiers are not keywords
- * It should not contain white space
- * It should not contain special characters

Valid Identifiers

- * Var1
- * _Var2
- * _1_Var
- * Var_1
- * user-first-name

Invalid Identifiers

- * 1Var
- * 1-Var
- * del
- * if

Note :- Identifiers can have finally alphabets or underscore or digits combination only but not other

Note + + +

Identifiers contains any length but can use short names / memorable names and meaningful names

→ Don't use multiple underscore symbol continuously in an identifier names

+ An identifier is used to create a memory in Python memory allocation and we can access this memory using this identifier name